Getty Images From time to time, all of us (or is it just me?) our romantic day dreams of escaping permanently to a lovely village nestled in medieval Europe. And those dreams may not be far-fetched much longer. Nicola Gatta, the mayor of a small town near Puglia, Italy called Candela, came up with a solution to kill two birds with a stone. Since the 1990s, Candela's population has declined from 8,000 residents to the current 2,700 —a byproduct of young people leaving the city in search of opportunities elsewhere. What was once a city described as Nap'licchie or Little Naples thanks to its street vendors, tourists and city life has now become vague, silent and increasingly desolate. But Gatta is determined to keep the city alive without losing her medieval feelings. I work every day with passion and commitment to bring Candela back to her old splendour, Gatta told CNN Travel. Gatta's ambition to keep the city prosperous has brought him a powerful solution: to pay new residents to move to the city. In addition to the €2,000 (about US$2,300) offered to new residents, newly built white houses with expansive terraces also await your welcome. This content is imported from Instagram. You may be able to find the same content in another format, or you may be able to find more information on your website. But if you have fantasies of living a dream vacation funded by the good heart of candela government, think again. We don't want people to gather here thinking they can live off the revenues of the city; all new residents must work and have an income. Mayor Stefano Bascianelli told CNN. There are rules here. This is how it works, Bascianelli explained, 800 euros for singles, 1,200 euros for couples, 1,500 to 1,800 euros for families of three members and more than 2,000 euros for families of four to five people. In addition, newcomers must also become permanent residents of Candela, take a house to rent and have a job that pays an annual salary of at least € 7,500. But you can really argue against it...
